The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet Bernard Shaw 2013-05-16 This little play is really a religious tract in dramatic form. If our silly censorship would permit its performance, it might possibly help to set right-side-up the perverted conscience and re-invigorate the starved self-respect of our considerable class of loose-lived playgoers whose point of honor is to deride all official and conventional sermons. As it is, it only gives me an opportunity of telling the story of the Select Committee of both Houses of Parliament which sat last year to enquire into the working of the censorship, against which it was alleged by myself and others that as its imbecility and mischievousness could not be fully illustrated within the limits of decorum imposed on the press, it could only be dealt with by a parliamentary body subject to no such limits.

Reproduction of the original.

The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet and Fanny's First Play Dan Laurence 1994-05-26 'A tearing, flaring, revivalist drama' was how Desmond MacCarthy described The Shewing-up of Blanco Posnet. Set in America's Wild West and aptly subtitled 'A Sermon in Crude Melodrama', this single-act play concerns the conversion of a horse thief desperate to 'keep the devil' in him and die game. Published in 1909, it brought Shaw into conflict with the Lord Chamberlain of England, who banned it on the grounds of alleged blasphemy, and it was twelve years before the play was performed in a London theatre. In an interview Shaw commented, 'I am sorry that Fanny's First Play has destroyed the cherished legend that I am an unpopular playwright ... for the first time I have allowed a play of mine to run itself to death ... And the worst of it is it will not die.' First performed in 1911, the play is a delightful farce in which Shaw debates some of his favourite subjects: middle-class morality, marriage, parents and children and women's rights. And, deliberately concealing his authorship, Shaw took the opportunity to satirize contemporary drama critics who, he claimed, 'do not know dramatic chalk from dramatic cheese when it is no longer labelled for them.'

Notes from Review of Reviews and World's Work - Volume 43 (1911): Shaw's individual and social morals are the direct outgrowth of his philosophical ideas, which he has not taken ready-made from others, as has been hinted more than once. Those ideas have come to him just as they came to Ibsen and Nietzsche: out of the spiritual atmosphere in which both he and they were born. In his day, these ideas were being scientifically formulated by men like Wilhelm Ostwald and Henri Bergson. They imply a new philosophy that may be called "psycho-sociological" in distinction from the older theological and mechanical philosophies. As Shaw sees life, it is never purposeless, never a matter of chance, never capable of turning back upon its already covered trail. Its way leads ever onward, and the direction is determined from within by a universal force, the Life Force-the same as Bergson's élan vital - which employs whatever has being for the accomplishment of its own unformulated aims. It is this all-compelling force which Shaw has in mind when he makes Blanco Posnet, the horse-thief, cry, with the noose barely off his neck: "You bet He didn't make me for nothing; and He wouldn't have made us at all if He could have done His work without us." "This little play is really a religious tract in dramatic form," says Shaw of "The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet," and he speaks the truth. For he is a very religious man, indeed, - so much so that his life and his art, his morals and his philosophy, are mere adjuncts to his religion: the great religion of the Life Force that demands of us at once so much and so little. What it does demand according to Shaw is merely that we learn to see and act upon the truth that flashed its illumination into Blanco Posnet's heart as he cried: "There's no good and bad; but, by Jiminy, gents, there's a rotten game, and there's a great game. I played the rotten game; but the great game was played on me; and now I'm for the great game every time. Amen."

The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet - With Preface on the Censorship George Bernard Shaw 2017-07-21 "The Shewing-Up of Blanco Posnet: A Sermon in Crude Melodrama" is a 1909 play in one act by George Bernard Shaw. Described by Shaw as a religious tract in dramatic form, it was originally refused a performance licence due to comments made by the protagonist about God, considered blasphemous at the time. George Bernard Shaw (26 July 1856 - 2 November 1950) was an Irish playwright, polemicist and critic. He had a significant influence on Western theatre, politics, and culture, and wrote more than sixty plays during his career. Shaw received the 1925 Nobel Prize in Literature and shared the 1938 Academy Award for Best Adapted Screenplay, which he won for the film adaptation of "Pygmalion". Other notable works by this author include: "The Admirable Bashville " (1901), "Androcles and the Lion" (1912), and "Saint Joan" (1923). Many vintage books such as this are becoming increasingly scarce and expensive. We are republishing this volume now in an affordable, modern, high-quality edition complete with a specially commissioned new biography of the author.
